Austin School District Receives $100,000 Grant

The City of Austin and Austin Energy have generously pledged $100,000 for the Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relation's Hispanic Futures Conference Series and its subset program La Clase Mágica (The Magic Classroom).

Citing the need for strong collaborative programs and initiatives that address the academic needs of Latino students and their families, Councilman Mike Martinez led the effort to invest the $100,000 contribution to carry out the Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relation's initiatives.

The Hispanic Futures Conference is a series of events, sponsored by the Austin Independent School District's Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relations, that seek to inform, prepare, excite, engage, and empower Latino youth and their families to navigate the schooling system and realize the magnitude of their opportunities.

Both the Hispanic Futures Conference series and La Clase Mágica have been collaboratively developed and sponsored by the Texas Center for Education Policy of the University of Texas at Austin, the Mexican-American Cultural Center of the City of Austin, Austin Energy, the Austin City Council, and the Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relations of the Austin Independent School District.

Rick Noriega Looking Good in Texas

Texas State Representative Rick Noriega (D-Houston) is moving ahead in the race to become the state's next United States Senator. Noriega, a lieutenant colonel in the Texas National Guard has built a tremendous political network around the state that is getting people out to vote. Currently touring the state for one last round with the voters, Noriega believes he may pull off the upset of year with a victory over John Cornyn, the first term incumbent. "We have worked hard and have a lot of committed people helping us. All we have to do is keep out foot on the gas and stay focused."

Last year when Noriega first declared for the Senate there were those who did not think he could pull it off. There were a lot of Mexican't shaking their heads no and saying, "No se puede. El Cornyn tiene mucho dinero." Now those Mexican't are starting to sing a different corrido. Ahora estan deciendo alguno de ellos, "Pues que tal vez el Rick si lo va hacer."

As of Friday, October 24, 2008, voter turnout has broken records in many counties across the state. If this turn out continues, stand by for a surprise on November 4th. Es todo!

Dr. Ricardo Romo Receives Distinguished Alummus Award

Dr. Ricardo Romo, President of the University of Texas at San Antonio, was recognized by the Texas Exes at their Distinguished Alumnus Awards on Friday, October 17. The award, created in 1958, recognizes annually up to six graduates or former students of The University of Texas at Austin who have distinguished themselves professionally and through service to the university. The Distinguished Alumnus Award is the highest award given by the Texas Exes.

Romo received his bachelor's degree in education from The University of Texas at Austin in 1967. He then attained a master's degree in history from Loyola University and a doctorate in history from University of California at Los Angeles. While at The University of Texas, where he attended on a track scholarship, Romo became the first Texan to run a mile in less than four minutes and earned All-American honors in Before becoming president of The University of Texas at San Antonio, Romo was a history professor and served as vice provost at UT Austin. Romo became the fifth president of The University of Texas at San Antonio in May 1999. During Romo's tenure at UTSA, enrollment has grown nearly 50 percent and the number of Ph.D. programs has increased from three to twenty-one.

Romo has also worked hard to improve the University's numerous programs, staff, and facilities to enhance the ever-growing student life at UTSA.

A talented photographer, Romo has done work for several art exhibits in the San Antonio area. Romo is also the historian and author of East Los Angeles: History of a Barrio, which is now in its ninth printing. President Romo is married to Dr. Harriett Romo. They have two children

Eva Longoria Plaving a Part in Getting Out the Vote in America

Corpus Christi native and Hollywood actress Eva Longoria Parker is not one to forget that participating en la politica is important no le hace quien seas.

In a press conference out together by Barack Obama's campaign. Longoria stated, "Go out and tell your families, go out and tell your friends, go out and tell your communities to participate in this upcoming election.'

U.S Congresswoman Hilda Solis de California joined Longoria in call for La Raza to do their part. The Obama campaign is increasing its efforts to reach out to the Hispanic community in swing states such as New Mexico, Colorado and Ne-

The National Council of La Raza (NCLR) and the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials (NALEO) are also working to increase the Latino turnout during this year's presidential election.

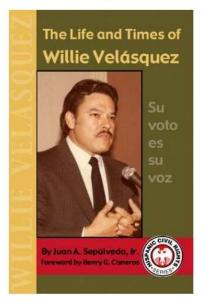

Remembering Willie Velasquez

Twenty years ago this year Willie Velasquez passed away. As the founder of the Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project (SVREP) he, along with his right hand man, Andy Hernandez, brought millions of Latinos into the political fold.

Willie was just 44 years old when he passed away (kidney cancer).

Today there are many young people who have never heard his name and know next to nothing about his sacrifices and determination to make La Raza count not just on election day, but every day. Willie Velasquez taught many people that unless you get organized and get your friends and family organized, nothing is going to change.

Juan Sepulveda, a 1995 graduate of Stanford Law School wrote about Willie Velasquez's life and work (see cover above) and shared with readers many never before told stories about how Willie struggled to keep the SVREP alive and his family together. Many people are unaware how just how much the families of activists must do without when there just isn't the money to pay all the bills. Sepulveda also discusses how Willie felt that Latino leaders should be held accountable to their constituencies. After this election season is over, make it a point to get and read this book. It will provide you with a lot of information about la politica that you never knew. Es Todo!

The Election Season Before Us

As we wind down the election season in America there is probably not a single voter who is going to be able to say with a straight face, that he or she did not know there was an election contest going on.

With the millions of dollars that candidates at all levels of government have spent to get the word out, I personally will find it very difficult to learn that some one didn't vote because they just didn't know what was going on November 4th, 2008.

That said, it has been a long time since so many have been fired up about voting. This past spring, in March, voters in many Texas counties turned out to vote in record breaking numbers. I heard stories of counties where the turnout was 10 times what it usually is. (Brazoria County)

Why are people turning out in such large numbers? The answer seems to be that people are in the mood for change. Over the summer, that mood began to change dramatically as the economy has taken a turn for the worse. People who have worked all their lives have lost big chunks of money that they had invested in 401Ks or other retirement accounts.

Many who have worked all their lives and have played by the rules, made sacrifices to save money and put it in retirement accounts, are now shocked and mad that they have lost that cherished nest egg.

They are mad and they want to blame somebody. But the problem is that some of those people who had their hands directly on their money are disappearing. They don't return phone calls.

So people are left to wonder or hope that their elected officials can do something to straighten out the economic mess that they find themselves in. And so what many people will do is go into the voting booth and take it out on the candidate or party that they feel is the most to blame.

In the few days since early voting has begun, we are already seeing droves of people turning out to vote. Many expect, myself included, that we will see a number of surprises come November 4th, 2008.

La temporada de las elecciones ya esta en moción por todo el país. No hay ningun votante que va poder decir que el o ella no sabia que las elecciones se estan llevando acabo.

Con los millones que han gastado los candidatos en los varios niveles de gobierno, es casi imposible que diga un persona que no sabia que es lo que estaba pasando o que es lo que pasar el 4 de noviembre.

En varios condados de Tejas se esta viendo cantidades de personas que estan saliendo a votar. En marzo, se vio en casi todo los 254 condados de Tejas miles de personas que salieron a votar en la primaria democrata. Ahora, eso si fue una sorpresa para todos.

Y porque la gente se esta saliendo a votar? Creo yo que la repuesta es que la gente esta enojada. Creo que la gente que han perdido dinero en el mercado quieren hecharle la culpa a alguien por sus perdidas. Muchos de ellos tal vez ven el hecho de votar como una manera de

culpar a aquellos que se les han robado su dinero

Unos van a salir a votar y piensan que los politicos van a poder arreglar sus problemas financieras. Tal vez si y tal vez no. Yo por mi parte no creo que los politicos van a poder regresar a ciertas gentes dinero que han perdido en el mercado.

Vamos a tener que esperar todos para ver que fin va tener todo esto de la economia. Por lo pronto, lo unico que puede hacer uno es estar al tanto de todo de lo que esta pasando. Por que si acaso se presenta algunas oportunidades, el que esta listo, es el que se va poder aprovechar.

Councilman Mike Martinez's Column

Two and a half short years ago, I ran for City Council with the belief in making a difference in people's lives. I believe that even more strongly today. Coming into this position, there was a complete understanding that the work would be hard, the learning curve would be steep, and the expectations would be to perform at a top level from my first day on the job.

As some of you may know, I cut my political teeth in the Austin Fire Department, and was fortunate to see our association through to its first collective bargaining contract. From that experience, several ideas have stuck with me and remain with me into my daily work routine here at City Hall. I learned that you don't have to be disagreeable to disagree – that different sides can disagree on a position without losing civility in our debate. Often, initial disagreements handled with cooperation can lead to better solutions than any one side could come up with alone. While these disagreements can be the most difficult thing to find a balance for, they also provide great opportunities to build a stronger community.

As I strive to maintain these ideals, I have learned that practicing them while working as a Council Member has proved harder than I would have imagined. Every day, members of the community talk to me about what ails our great City. The people that the City Council hears from, regardless of whether we agree or not with their position, are truly the backbone of what makes Austin a great city to live in.

Deciding what actions will best benefit the future of our City is often a struggle when a lot of the feedback from our community conflicts. However, one of the best parts about this community is the passion with which our neighbors approach the decisions at City Council. For me, the most difficult part about being a Council Member is making those tough decisions about the future of this community, and having those decisions be received as not being responsive to, or representative of, the community – because in my mind nothing could be further from the truth.

I consider this, the most difficult part of my job, to be a welcome blessing that I continue to work on. Being a member of the Austin City Council is a privilege and an honor, and I am thankful for each day I get to come to City Hall and work to make our community better.

An Interview with AISD Director of Diversity

Earlier this year Margarita Decierdo was appointed as the Director of Diversity and Intercultural
Relations with the Austin
Independent School District. She received her bachelors degree in Spanish Literature from the Universidad de Madrid and another bachelors degree from the University of California at Santa Barbara in Sociology and Criminology as a minor.

She graduated with a masters from the University of California at Berkeley with a doctoral completion in the process. Now that the new school year has started we thought it would be a good time to check in and see how things are moving along.

La Voz: Thank you for taking the time to share with our readers how your job is going. Let's start by asking you to tell us about your job and some of responsibilities your position covers.

Decierdo: Some of what my position entails is to provide a voice for teachers, staff, administrators, and principals in managing the affairs of culturally relevant pedagogy. equity in the classroom, establish a training system where teachers are more culturally responsive to their students, and finally, parent and community engagement. The overall vision and mission is to build a culture of inclusion, promote equity, access, and success, and extend to the Austin community a climate of respect and collaboration.

La Voz: In your view, why was this job position created?

Decierdo: If you study the history of Austin and its surrounding communities, there has been segregation in our neighborhoods, poverty, and social inequity. When hired, I was asked to address issues of equity and inclusion.

La Voz: What does that necessarily translate into?

Decierdo: I believe it means creating oportunities for the AISD family, and community to begin conversations about difficult and intense issues of discrimination and racism. How do we close the student achievement gap? How do we deal with the high drop out rate? How do we deal with the changing demographics of the current time, and what impact does this have on our schools and neighborhoods?

In order to address these, and other issues, we have to begin with historical understandings like the 1928 City of Austin Master Plan, which created "Negro" districts. If we can understand the impact the "Plan" on our neighborhoods, and the perceptions we hold about East Austin it would help us deal more precisely with the low performance of our schools. We cannot point fingers at one thing or another, but rather, how do we move forward with the resources and issues facing our district, community, and children.

La Voz: As far as you know, are there similar positions like yours in other school districts in Texas?

Decierdo: There are different districts throughout the state of Texas that are making attempts to creating programs to assist with issues of cultural navigation, equity in the classroom, but really, one like this, no. This is the first Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relations. I commend the district, the school board, and superintendent Dr. Pat Forgione for taking the initiative to develop such a ground-breaking department.

La Voz: Why has diversity and intercultural relations come to the forefront in some educational institutions?

Decierdo: I believe that these issues have come to the forefront because of the demands of the 21st century, a global economy, and an increasingly diverse society.

La Voz: As you look around and see the increasing number of Latino students in the Austin Independent School District, there are some who continue to think that all Latinos are poor and recent arrivals from Mexico. What is dangerous about this idea?

Decierdo: The reality is that here in Austin the growth of Latinos/as are due to increased birth rates, not international migration. What's dangerous is that we create a situation where we're homogenizing groups of people and being informed on myths that are not supported by data, and therefore could erroneously lead to malinformed school policies and practices.

La Voz: Who do you think is going to have the hardest time understanding why certain stereotypes don't work anymore as we continue to move into the 21st century?

Decierdo: If I could understand this, and others understood this question, we wouldn't have this problem. This issue of stereotypes (type-casting, and lumping everyone in one category) began long ago. Mexicanos, for example, were type-casted as "lazy" and "worthless". It was created to ensure that one ethnic group was seen in one way, compared to I another. If you repeat a message to a society, often times people begin to believe the type-casting without really understanding the "real" person or individual. We must change that mindset in our families, children, and the community as a to increase, what are some of the consequences you foresee?

Decierdo: More poverty, more dropouts, and more of our youth left behind. I say this with reservation. We must work together to ensure that this does not occur.

La Voz: Share with our readers some of the coming initiatives you hope to launch in the near future.

Decierdo: Training in Cultural Competency, the Hispanic Futures Conference series, a district-wide plan that ensures accountability, support for the African American community with the African American Men and Boys Conferences, and most importantly, unify disunity based on miseducation about our children, parents, and community. We must begin to change our way of "doing business as usual," and begin in ourselves, in order to move towards the 21st Century Education.

In fact, Councilman Mike Martinez, the City of Austin, and Austin Energy have pledged $100,000 to support the Hispanic Futures Conference and one of its collaborative subset programs, La Clase Mágica. Councilman Martinez cited the drastic need for strong programs that address the needs of the growing Latino community in Austin as the basis for the city's contribution.

La Voz: Tell us about the Hispanic Futures Conference.

Decierdo: The Hispanic Futures Conference is a series of events, sponsored by my department that seek to inform, prepare, excite, engage, and empower Hispanic youth and their families to navigate the to believe in our children and I schooling system and realize the magnitude of their opportunities.

> The Hispanic Futures Conference Series serves as a platform for supportive programs and collaborations that can assist students and their families in meeting the demands and fulfilling the promise of the 21st century. Through the Hispanic Futures Conference, the Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relations (DDIR) will provide students and their families with information, materials, and hands-on experiences that will help to focus the impact of academic endeavors.

> Over the course of the academic year, the DDIR will sponsor a series of five HFC events across the city that focus on leadership and decision making for students. The collaborative and inclusive nature of the HFC series will allow Austin's community, universities, businesses, organizations the opportunity to assist the AISD in its efforts to serve the educational needs of our growing Hispanic student population.

Our series begins with our inaugural HFC event entitled "Be Informed and Aware of your Resources and Power" on November 9, 2008 at the City of Austin's Mexican American Cultural Center. Our keynote speaker, Dr. Olga A. Vásquez has graciously accepted our request to speak about the issues of community and university collaboration in education, principles of respect for the "sacred ground" of the community, issues of diversity in education, and the promise and opportunity of programs and initiatives like the Hispanic Futures Conference, La Clase Mágica, and the newly developed AISD Department of Diversity and Intercultural Relations.

> La Voz: What is La Clase Mágica?

Decierdo: La Clase Mágica is a wellstructured, universityconnected, technology-rich afterschool program for English language learners and their parents that equips them with the cultural, social and academic skills that they need in order to meet and surpass educational standards. The program does this by fostering biliteracy, which is literacy in both English and Spanish, a deep-principled learning of math, reading, writing and science, and college-going aspirations and orientations. The model is backed with 18 years of research and success from the University of California, San Diego Professor Olga A. Vásquez.

I'm happy to report that my Department will be a partner in helping to establish the first La Clase Mágica pilot site in Texas. This will be a collaboration between my department, The University of Texas at Austin's Texas Center for Education Policy, under the direction of Dr. Angela Valenzuela, the Mexican American Cultural Center of the City of Austin, Councilman Mike Martinez, and Austin Energy. We plan to launch our pilot site in the Fall of 2009 and plans are in place to quickly spread this program across Austin and even the entire State of Texas.

La Voz: You mentioned the Texas Center for Education Policy at the University of Texas at Austin, what other projects are you working on together?

Decierdo: UT's Texas Center for Education Policy (TCEP) has been diligently working to establish the La Clase Mágica collaboration and provide strong research support for my department's initiatives. TCEP will work closely with AISD to bring together some of the country's best education scholars, in order to help solve AISD's most pressing issues. The significance of working with an institution like TCEP is that the district, and community can begin developing a longstanding relationship with the university.

La Voz: Since joining the Austin Independent School District, you have had a chance to get a better feel for the schools and the community in general. Have you had any surprises come your way?

Decierdo: I have seen that there is a strong and dedicated community in East Austin that holds the best interests of our youth at heart.

La Voz: Since you have spent some time in California and other places are there ideas and insights that you believe are going to help you in this new job?

Decierdo: I think it's important remember that communities across the country can benefit by sharing their ideas and resources across borders.

La Voz: We like to wrap up our interviews by asking some lighter questions. Below we have listed a few items we would like you to respond to:

Favorite color: Brown is beautiful

Last book read: The Art of War by Sun Tzu

La Profesora Dice:

"LA DESERCIÓN ESCOLAR: UN RETO PARA TODAS LAS GENERACIONES"

"Necesitamos más motivación para los muchachos de parte de las escuelas y de los padres. Necesitamos más becas en lugar de cárceles. Más apoyo al arte y la música (porque) si no el resultado será más delincuencia," dijo un padre del grupo de padres pioneros del Mexican American Legal Defense Educational

Fund (MALDEF). Estas palabras indican que nos preocupa muchísimo este problema y que hay una crisis en la educación de los estudiantes latinos aquí en los Estados Unidos.

Veamos la situación a través de la vida escolar de tres estudiantes típicos que contribuyen al alto nivel de deserción escolar que conocemos como "dropout."

Miguel apenas tiene 14 años y acaba de llegar de un país latinoamericano. Se inscribió en una escuela en Houston, Texas y después de tres meses decidió salirse porque no sabía nada de inglés y no entendía las clases. No sentía que estaba aprendiendo nada, la escuela dejó de ser un reto y tristemente fue perdiendo la satisfacción de aprender.

Así, aunque no tenía un seguro social, consiguió trabajo en un McDonald's donde recibe el salario mínimo. Su deserción escolar no contó en las estadísticas porque el estado de Texas institucionalmente ha hecho conteos fugaces y mal representados. El 15% de los recién llegados dejan la escuela.

Sandra pertenece a la tercera generación de mexicanos en los Estados Unidos en su familia. Su abuelo llegó de México en 1898 y vino sin educación formal. Tuvo 8 hijos y ninguno terminó la escuela secundaria. Los padres de Sandra no terminaron la escuela porque siendo mexicanos vivieron la época de segregación en las escuelas públicas de Texas en donde se proporcionaba un mínimo de educación al alumno mexicano.

Con esa historia familiar, Sandra ha decidido abandonar los estudios también pues nadie en su familia valora la educación y cree que ella tampoco podrá superarse. Sandra se ha conformado con su bajo nivel educativo y apenas puede leer y escribir. El centro de investigación llamado Pew Hispanic Center dio a conocer en un estudio que el 14% de los latinos que nacen en los Estado Unidos dejan la escuela. Esto afecta a los estudiantes de origen mexicano más que a cualquier otro latino, pues más del 80% de los estudiantes latinos son de origen mexicano.

Mary se siente hundida en la pobreza. A los 16 años de edad, ella se encuentra en su tercer año escolar de la secundaria (es junior) pero se encuentra embarazada y ha decidido abandonar sus estudios para después tomar el examen de acreditación de la secundaria llamado GED. La vida de Mary no ha sido fácil. Ella es una de cuatro hermanos y su madre es madre soltera que mantiene a la familia con asistencia pública. A pesar de las dificultades, a Mary le gusta mucho la escuela y tiene unas calificaciones extraordinarias. Aunque Mary saque su GED (General Education Development), se le considerará un dropout porque abandonó la escuela. Lamentablemente, un 18% de estudiantes Latinos contribuyen a la deserción escolar por causa de la pobreza.

Como grupo latino, estas tres situaciones nos perjudican socialmente y económicamente; y lo que es peor, estas situaciones pueden llevar a nuestros muchachos a terribles consecuencias como puede ser el crimen. La realidad se muestra en muchas investigaciones. En especial, un estudio del Intercultural Development Research Association (IDRA) ha descubierto que de cada 100 estudiantes latinos que empiezan la escuela, menos del 50% se gradúan de high school.

Las causas de este fenómeno se atribuyen a varias razones. Por ejemplo: un currículo que no es culturalmente relevante, la falta de esfuerzos de cambios de legislación a nivel local, estatal y federal, y a diversas barreras que previenen el éxito en la educación del estudiante minoritario.

 $_{\mathrm{i}}\mathbf{P}$ ero ya basta de tanta negatividad!

Todos creemos en el "American Dream". Creemos que el 'Sueño Americano' es posible y lo deseamos. ¡No puede haber padres que no quieran que sus hijos se superen en este país! Como latinos, estamos dispuestos a conseguir lo que dice IDRA; queremos movernos de un estado negativo que relaciona al latino con la deserción escolar a un estado positivo de superación personal y de grupo, queremos cambiar "de dropping out a holding on." Hay lugar para valorar a cada estudiante; hay un educador en la vida de cada estudiante que cree en su éxito total; hay un padre o una madre que cree en sus hijos, y están los muchachos que necesitamos que crean en sí mismos.

Ellos son nuestro cambio. Necesitamos que nuestras familias tomen parte de la escuela y de la comunidad, pues su apoyo es invaluable. También, se necesita un cambio drástico en la preparación de nuestros maestros que sea eficazmente cultural. La tecnología y el desarrollo profesional efectivos son herramientas clave para llegar a esta meta. Nuestra herencia latina y nuestra perseverancia en esta nación nos empujan a cambiar esas cifras en las estadísticas por cifras que nos llenen de orgullo latino.

En la próxima columna escribiré de un tema favorito, el derecho de los estudiantes indocumentados a la educación pública. Nos vemos ...

UFW Members from the Valley Going to Colorado to help Obama

by Steve Taylor Rio Grande Guardian

Seven members of the United Farm Workers union in the Rio Grande Valley traveled to Colorado to help Barack Obama's presidential campaign. The seven, all women, trying to convince Hispanic voters that Democrat Obama would make a better president than Republican John McCain.

"We want to reach out to the Spanishspeaking community in Colorado and tell him why they should vote for Barack Obama. This election is so important and Barack Obama can bring about the change we desperately need," said Cristela Gonzalez of Edinburg, speaking in Spanish.

Gonzalez has not been to Colorado before, and neither has her UFW colleague, Maria Gomez, of Pharr."We are excited about going to Colorado. It is probably going to be colder than South Texas but we are looking forward to going," Gomez said. "We have to tell the migrants why this election is important. We need to talk about the important issues, like repairing the economy, passing comprehensive immigration reform, the need for universal health care, and better public education."

The Obama campaign has reached out to the Valley residents because they are fluent in Spanish and because they are experienced community organizers. Gomez, in particular, has a lot of experience working on city and county election campaigns in the Valley. Most were migrant farm workers in their youth and traveled the United States in search of seasonal work.

In 2004, President Bush narrowly defeated John Kerry in Colorado. Recent opinion polls show Obama with a slight lead over McCain in the key battleground state. Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin, McCain's pick for vice president, was in three Republican strongholds in Colorado on Monday to ignite GOP get-out-the-vote efforts. The Hispanic population in Colorado is growing fast. In the 2004 presidential election about 204,000

University/Wall Street Journal poll, released in late September, showed Hispanic support for Obama in Colorado at 68 percent, with support for McCain at 26 percent.

Colorado Hispanics were registered to vote, and 165,000 actually cast ballots.

In 2006, the respective numbers had jumped to 228,000 and 158,000.According to the William C. Velasquez Institute, a nonpartisan think tank, Obama and McCain would be in a statistical tie in Colorado if Hispanic voters were not included. With Hispanics factored in, the Velasquez Institute says Obama is heavily favored to win the battleground states of Colorado, New Mexico and Nevada.A Quinnipiac

The timing of the visit could not have been better for the seven Valley residents, given that they back Obama. The Democratic Party is holding rallies in seven Colorado cities - Denver, Colorado Springs, Fort Collins, Pueblo, Commerce City, Aurora and Longmont - as part of an initiative called Viva el Voto!" If Latinos get out there and vote and vote early for this ticket, our voice will resonate," Denise Maes, chairwoman of the Denver Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, said at a news conference.

New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson and California Democratic congressmen Xavier Becerra and Joe Baca will be among the Obama surrogates at the rallies.

The UFW, which was founded in 1962 by Cesar E. Chavez and Dolores Huerta, endorsed Obama for president in June. "Throughout his career, beginning as a community organizer to his present position as Senator, Barack Obama has shared the values of the United Farm Workers," said UFW President Arturo Rodriguez, at the time of the endorsement."

"He understands the tremendous role played by our country's farm workers in helping to feed our nation. Sen. Obama stands firm in his conviction for comprehensive immigration reform. He has been a strong supporter of the UFWsponsored AgJOBS – legislation that would help stabilize our nation's agricultural workforce." Rodriguez said that as president, Obama would continue to "hold fast to his convictions by signing comprehensive immigration reform. increasing the minimum wage and making sure every American has affordable and quality health care. The United Farm Workers will do everything in our power to make sure Barack Obama reaches the White House this fall, because we know he will be a voice for all working Americans."

The Denver Post on Monday cited a CNN story about unnamed McCain strategists and advisers saying the prospect of the GOP winning Colorado was bleak. CNN reported that the Obama campaign was in a better position to get out the vote in Colorado. McCain's regional spokesman Tom Kise says the CNN story is not true and that "pulling back in Colorado is not on the table."

VALINDA BOLTON

PRACTICAL SOLUTIONS. INDEPENDENT LEADERSHIP.

PREPARING TEXAS TO COMPETE

STOP CONSTANT TESTING: Working with parents and teachers, Valinda helped pass legislation to phase out TAKS at the high school level.

STEP UP ON MATH AND SCIENCE: Valinda helped win small increases in teacher pay, but has made clear to state leaders that more needs to be done to attract qualified teachers — especially in math and science— into the classroom.

FREEZE TUITION RATES: Valinda is calling for increased financial aid and a moratorium on tuition increases to ensure working families are not priced out of a college education.

PLANNING THE RIGHT WAY FOR TEXAS' FUTURE

HOLD TXDOT ACCOUNTABLE: Valinda supports Senator Kirk Watson's efforts to hold TXDOT accountable for "losing" $1 billion and bringing local road construction to a standstill. PLACE LIMITS ON TOLL ROADS: Valinda opposes foreign ownership of Texas toll roads and has spoken out against tolling existing roads. PROMOTE RENEWABLE ENERGY: To reduce costs and greenhouse gases, Valinda is working to promote energy conservation technologies and encourage utilities to meet Texas' growing energy needs with renewable energy.

TACKLING THE HEALTH CARE CRISIS TODAY

FUND RESEARCH FOR A CURE: Valinda supported Lance Armstrong's initiative to create the Cancer Prevention & Research Institute of Texas that will provide over $300 billion in research grants to help find cures.

EXPAND EMPLOYER COVERAGE: Valinda is pushing for tax breaks for small businesses — that employ more than one out of every two Texans — to help defray costs in providing employee health care.

GET OUR FAIR SHARE OF FEDERAL DOLLARS: Valinda has fought for full funding of CHIP to expand children's health care and stop federal dollars designated for Texas from going to other states.
