Decierdo Named Director of AISD Diversity Relations

The Austin School District announced the appointment of Margarita Arce Decierdo as the new Director of Diversity and Intercultural Relations for the District. Her expertise is in management, capacity building and community engagement.

Decierdo has taught sociology at Austin Community College, Huston-Tillotson University, Abilene Christian University, San Francisco State University and the University of California at Berkeley. She has also taught courses in race relations, social inequality, Mexican American History and Chicano/Latino Studies. She also served as historian and curator for the African American Museum in Oakland, California.

Decierdo has a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Spanish Literature from the Universidad de Madrid, a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Sociology from the University of California at Santa Barbara, a Master of Arts Degree in Sociology from the University of California at Berkeley and is a Ph.D candidate in Sociology from the University of California at Berkeley.

In Austin, Decierdo has provided cultural competency training to the Austin Police Department and worked with the City of Austin as an Assessment Stability Project Coordinator for Hurricane Katrina evacuees. Decierdo’s duties will include working with the district on a variety of equity and diversity issues as they relate to student, staff and the community.

Lopez Named Elementary Teacher of the Year

Catherine López is a 1st grade Bilingual teacher at J.J. Pickle Elementary School. As a child, she immigrated to the United States from South America — but encountered difficulties in school. “I was determined to make the educational experience of immigrant and non-English speaking students a more positive life event than my own,” she said about her decision to become a teacher. She encourages her students to be proud of their cultural and linguistic heritage, teaching them that the ability to speak two languages is “a marvelous gift.” Ms. López earned a bachelor’s degree from Oberlin College, master’s degrees from Texas A&M University and Southwest Texas State University, and professional certification by the National Board Professional Teaching Standards. She joined the Austin School District in 2000, and taught at Blanton Elementary School from 2000-2006.

LBJ Student Gomez is a Scholarship Winner

Maria Elizabeth Gomez, a Senior at LBJ High School in Austin, Texas is the winner of a $1000.00 dollar scholarship that will be awarded to her at the Austin Voices for Education and Youth Shout Out Awards Dinner and Fundraiser at the Mexican American Cultural Center on May 8, 2008. Gomez, who will be attending Texas A&M University in College Station was nominated and selected by a committee over the last several weeks.

Rosas From Reilly Elementary Wins “Scholarship”

Parent Volunteer Irma Rosas is the winner of one of two $1,000.00 “Parent Scholarships that will be given at the Austin Voices for Education and Youth Awards Dinner and Fundraiser at the Mexican American Cultural Center on May 8, 2008. Ms. Rosas who is originally from Monterrey, Mexico puts in an average of 35 hours a week at Reilly Elementary School doing everything from designing bulletin boards to reading to children of various grade levels.

Ms. Rosas went to school in Mexico to become a bookkeeper but says it is her dream to one day become a school teacher.

Gilberto Ocañas to Lead Hispanic Leadership Council

Long time Democratic Party activist Gilberto Ocañas has been tapped to co-lead a new effort by the Democratic National Committee to build support in the Latino community for the coming presidential election in November.

Ocañas is a regular Democratic Party financial contributor and has a wide range of contacts throughout the state of Texas. During the 1990s, he worked for the Democratic Party in Washington, D.C. during Hispanic outreach. Ocañas is a graduate of the University of Houston, Ocañas is the owner of Ocañas printing and fulfillment company in Austin, Texas. La Voz de Austin - May, 2008
Saying Good Bye to a Legend in Her Own Time

I did not know Lena Guerrero personally. I had heard much about her during the 1980s as her political career was taking off, but I cannot say that I knew her. But I did say hello to her once as we passed each other at a conference at the University of Houston. She smiled back and said, "hi."

It was not my intention to put on the cover of this edition of La Voz de Austin. Something else was already in the works. But after attending her funeral mass on April 26th, and listening to all the people who were indeed her friends, I thought it would be appropriate to switch out the covers.

As I listened to the various speakers share their memory of this remarkable young lady, I was impressed by how each one seemed to touch on the tenacity of Ms. Guerrero. I was also moved by how many others commented on her lack of fear. (ella no tenía miedo de nada)

It is not often that a Lena Guerrero answers the call for public service. She was indeed a pioneer and role model for the many who have since followed in her footsteps. De parte de La Voz de Austin, and all those who help to produce this publication every month, we wish to extend our condolences to the Lena Guerrero family. On page 10 is a tribute that was taken from the funeral program in Austin, Texas.

A Mother’s Day Message

Dear readers,

I’ve always thought of the month of May as a precious and beautiful month. Flowers are blooming, the grass is growing and school will be ending soon. May also is the month we honor our dear mothers. Many people speak of their country as the mother country. Sometimes they speak of their language the mother tongue. Eve is called the mother of mankind. We speak of the earth as Mother Earth and Mother Nature. But, the word “Mother” is the sweetest of all the words we hear. It means love, patience, understanding, forgiveness, respect, caring and many more.

The second Sunday of May, the 11th, is “Mother’s Day”. Call your mother, send her a bouquet of flowers, or go with her to church and see how proud she is to be with her family on this very special day. We celebrate mother’s day in many churches throughout the world. In many countries it is traditional to wear a carnation-red if your mother was living, and a white carnation if she was deceased. That tradition is not seen very often anymore.

A day for honoring mothers was observed many years ago in England. It was called “Mothering Sunday” and came in mid-lent. Julia Ward Howe made the first known suggestion for a Mother’s day in United States in 1872. For several years she held an annual Mother’s day meeting. Mary Towles started conducting Mother’s Day celebrations in 1887. Frank E. Hering launched a campaign for the observance of Mother’s day in 1904. It was until three years later that Ann Jarvis began a campaign for a nationwide observance of Mother’s day. It was in 1914 that Mother’s Day received national recognition.

The Bible tells us to honor our mother. Does this mean only on Mother’s day? We should honor our mothers always. Everyday should be one of honor, love, respect, understanding, patience, caring, to “Our Mother.”

Happy Mother’s Day!
Got summer plans?

Are you a teenager looking for ways to keep busy this summer? There are so many options for summer activities, no wonder it can be difficult to know where to begin.

by Linda Medina

Here are some tips to help you get going on your search.

Work — Check with your high school counselor and ask how they can assist with your job search. They may have postings for local businesses, for babysitting or for other part-time positions. Next, tell everyone you know that you’re looking for positions. Next, tell everyone you know that you’re looking for positions. Speak with teachers, family, coaches, friends, parents of friends - anyone and everyone you know are often happy to assist. Some examples are:

- Yard maintenance. There is always something that needs to be done…mowing lawns and weed control.
- Pet sitting. Offer pet walking, bathing, cleaning, etc. services.
- Run errand, messenger, or delivery service. Many law firms, small businesses need runners to send messages. Keep in mind that you’ll be on the go!

Summer School — it may make you think of remedial classes for students. Yes, lots of high schools do have mandatory summer school for students who have under performed. But summer school can also mean attending classes at a college, in programs students actually compete to get into. These days, there are summer schools for just about every type of student, whether you’d like to work on academic subjects or developing skills such as playing an instrument or sport. Check out the local performing arts centers, science museums, and parks; many have summer programs where you can get hands-on experience.

When looking for a summer school program, here are some important factors to consider:

- What do you want to get out of summer school? Do you want to charge up your academics? Act in a play? Teach young children? Learn how a political campaign is conducted? Polish up a second language? Work with engineers in the computer industry?
- Can you get high-school (or college) credit for summer school courses? Receiving credit depends both on the school where you take the course and on your home school.
- How much can you spend on summer school? If the answer is nothing, are free programs available in your state or school district?

Volunteer: Make a Difference

Community service is always a valuable endeavor, and the summer is a wonderful time to make a difference in your community. Find a non-profit that you are passionate about. Like the elderly citizens, homeless, children, the arts, homeless, elderly citizens, etc.

Last note

In addition to the programs, the internships, the jobs, the volunteer work, the college visits, or whatever else might be part of your summer, there should also be time for family, friends, and just for you. No matter how you spend your summer, do not forget to do the things that make you feel happy and energized — whether that means spending extra time with your younger sibling before you leave for college, swimming at Town Lake, making time to see friends you haven’t seen in awhile between tests and athletic games, reflecting on the past year, going out for ice cream, or anything else, you shouldn’t forget to relax and have fun!

Plans progress for new Catholic high school

By Donna Poston Williams Correspondent

“How many times in your life do you get the chance to create a legacy?” Anna Lange mused, explaining her decision to co-chair the capital campaign to build Austin’s newest Catholic high school.

Anna and her husband Kevin Lange, the young parents of five children, are spearheading a $15 million fundraising effort, “so that our children, and our children’s children and many future generations will be able to have a Catholic education,” Anna said. “It is a huge commitment of time and treasure, but a small price to pay in the long run.”

The new high school, St. Dominic Savio, named for the 19th century teenage saint, is expected to open its doors in the fall of 2009. Located in north Austin on a 45-acre tract adjacent to Holy Family Catholic School, the site was selected because of the projected population growth in that area.

“Today, Austin has only two Catholic high schools, and both are located south of town,” Anna said. “As our city continues to grow north, many Catholic families, including ourselves, are left with the difficult choice of either driving across town every day or going to a public high school. St. Dominic’s will change that. My husband and I are very committed to Catholic education and want to make it a real possibility for more families like us.”

Austin is a relatively young diocese, only 60 years old, and has seen a steady increase in the number of Catholics. “As more and more people relocate here, the number of Catholics continues to grow, and they bring with them an expectation of conveniently-located Catholic schools,” said Ned Vanders, the diocesan superintendent of Catholic schools. “The increasing demand for Catholic education in Central Texas is good news. Many dioceses in the northern part of the country are closing down their schools, while here in the south and southwest we have a thriving community and our need for an updated long-range education plan has become urgent.”

Bishop Gregory Aymond, a strong proponent of Catholic education, was assigned to the Austin Diocese in 2001, and quickly began strengthening Catholic schools. Since then, he has focused a great deal of his time and energy creating a vibrant vision for the future of Catholic education in Central Texas. The creation of St. Dominic Savio is part his overall plan.

“This school fills a deeply felt void in our diocese, opening the way for many more families to experience

“It’s an awed by the dedication of Kevin and Anna Lange and so many others, who are working tirelessly to make St. Dominic Savio a reality,” Bishop Aymond said. “This school fills a deeply felt void in our diocese, opening the way for many more families to experience an outstanding high school curriculum in a faith-filled environment. This will be a diocesan high school, rooted in the Catholic tradition,” Bishop Aymond continued. “Its academic, athletic and extracurricular programs will challenge students to go beyond excellence, to reflect on the needs of others, to be committed to faith and to become public servant leaders.”

St. Dominic Savio’s facilities will be built in three phases. The first phase, to be completed by opening day, includes 83,690 square feet of new construction with 13 classrooms, a self-standing cafeteria with a stage, a drama, band/orchestra and choral suite, an art studio, a gym, two science learning centers with laboratories, a computer learning center, a chapel, a library/media center, administrative offices with reception area, conference room, student health and teachers’ work suites and three athletic fields. Additional classrooms, science labs, technology and computer classrooms and fine arts rooms are planned for future phases.

Opening in the fall of 2009 with a freshman class, St. Dominic Savio will add a grade each subsequent year, with full enrollment by 2012. Construction plans are designed to ultimately accommodate 750 students. The school will be dedicated to serving diverse cultures and socioeconomic backgrounds.

According to Debbie Ortiz, a fundraising consultant with Community Counselling Services, the cost for the construction of phase one of the high school is approximately $21.5 million. The capital campaign has the task of raising $15 million of that, while the diocese has agreed to carry the anticipated debt.

“This effort can only be successful with passionate leadership and the financial support of many,” Ortiz explained. “We are truly blessed to have the Langes at the helm.” The capital campaign is on track according to Anna Lange. “We have raised about half of our goal to date, but we still need to raise a minimum of $5 million by October of 2008.” Actual construction will begin this June.

BRIAN MEEHAN The Oregonian Staff

Gary Frederick thought he had seen everything in 40 years at Central Washington University. He'd coached baseball and women's basketball for 11 years, been an assistant on the football team for 17 and athletic director for 18.

Last weekend, he learned he was wrong.

In the top of the second inning as his Wildcats played host to Western Oregon University in Ellensburg, Wash., something happened that spoke to the beauty of athletics. It came in the form of a home run that no one in attendance will forget.

"Never in my life had I seen anything like it," said Frederick, 70, in his 14th season as softball coach. "It was just unbelievable."

Central entered Saturday's doubleheader one game behind Western Oregon in the Great Northwest Athletic Conference race. At stake was a bid to the NCAA's Division II playoffs. Western won the first game 8-1, extending its winning streak to 10 games.

Central desperately needed the second game to keep its postseason hopes alive.

Western Oregon's 5-foot-2-inch right fielder came up to bat with two runners on base in the second inning. Sara Tucholsky's game was off to a rough start. A group of about eight guys sitting behind the right field fence had been heckling her.

"They were giving me a pretty hard time," said Tucholsky, a Forest Grove High School graduate. "They were just being boys, trying to get in my head."

At the plate, Tucholsky concentrated on ignoring the wise guys. She took strike one. And then the senior did something she had never done before — even in batting practice.

The career .153 hitter smashed the next pitch over the center field fence for an apparent three-run home run.

The exuberant former high school point guard sprinted to first. As she reached the bag, she looked up to watch the ball clear the fence and missed first base. Six feet past the bag, she stopped abruptly to return and touch it. But something gave in her right knee; she collapsed on the base path.

"I was in a lot of pain," she told The Oregonian on Tuesday. "Our first-base coach was telling me I had to crawl back to first base. 'I can't touch you,' she said, 'or you'll be out. I can't help you.'"

Tucholsky, to the horror of teammates and spectators, crawled through the dirt and the pain back to first.

Western coach Pam Knox rushed onto the field and talked to the umpires near the fence. The teammates walked over and picked up Tucholsky and resumed the home-run walk, pausing at each base to allow Tucholsky to touch the bag with her uninjured leg.

"We started laughing when we touched second base," Holtman said. "I said, 'I wonder what this must look like to other people.'"

Holtman got her answer when they arrived at home plate. She looked up and saw the entire Western Oregon team in tears.

"Everybody in the stands was crying. My coach was crying. It touched a lot of people," Holtman said.

Even the hecklers in right field quieted for a half-inning before resuming their tirade at the outfielder who replaced Tucholsky.

Central Washington players carried Tucholsky around the bases.

The umpires said nothing in the rule book precluded help from the opposition. Holtman asked her teammate junior shortstop and honors program student Liz Wallace of Florence, Mont., to lend a hand.

The teammates walked over and carried Tucholsky to touch the bag with her uninjured leg.

"Everybody in the stands was crying. My coach was crying. It touched a lot of people."

Holtman believes sports has made her a better person. She wants to give back. Mallory Holtman plans to do that by becoming a coach.

Western Oregon won the game 4-2 and extinguished Central Washington's playoff hopes.

Afterward, Central coach Frederick said he received a clarification from the umpiring supervisor, who said NCAA rules allow a substitute to run for a player who is injured after a home run. The clarification, however, could not diminish the glory of Holtman's and Wallace's gesture. Holtman downplayed her role, which her coach said is typical of the White Salmon, Wash., native.

"In the end, it is not about winning and losing so much," Holtman said. "It was about this girl. She hit it over the fence and was in pain and she deserved a home run."

"This is a huge experience I will take away. We are not going to remember if we won or lost, we are going to remember this kind of stuff that shows the character of our team. It is the best group of girls I've played with. I came up with the idea, but any girl on the team would have done it."

Tucholsky went to the doctor Tuesday. Her knee was still swollen; her trainer suspects she tore her anterior cruciate ligament. She will be in the dugout this weekend when Western Oregon attempts to cement an NCAA berth with games against Seattle and Western Washington.

Tucholsky will graduate this spring as a business major with a minor in health. She plans to continue her studies at Portland State and pursue a career in the health field. But she will never forget the generosity of her opponents in her final collegiate game.

"Those girls did something awesome to help me get my first home run," she said. "It makes you look at athletes in a different way. It is not always all about winning but rather helping someone in a situation like that."

Holtman knows something of knee injuries. On May 8, she is scheduled to have arthroscopic surgery on both knees, which have pained her all season. On June 7, she will graduate with a degree in business. She intends to study sports administration in graduate school at Central Washington.

Mission
The School Inequities Project is a student research project which examined a variety of performance indicators in the Austin Independent School District’s 12 high schools.

The Project was originally created by youth mobilizers from Garza High School, Angelo McHorse and Alice Geaccone. The idea for this project came about when these students were shocked by the inequities between schools in more affluent neighborhoods in comparison to those in less affluent neighborhoods.

. . . . if AISD gives equitable funding to schools, why does it seem that resource allocation are not the same across the district?

Two interns from the University of Texas at Austin, Amanda Aguirre, a Sociology major, and Laura Avila, an Anthropology major, came on board with Austin Voices for Education & Youth at the beginning of the Spring 2008 semester to tackle this question.

The Project Manager of the School Inequities Project is Youth Consultant, Ariel Kay. Ariel, who has recently been accepted into Bryn Mawr College and will be majoring in Anthropology.

Other students who participated in this study were: The Youth Advisory Council, Stand Up Clubs, Youth Action for Educational Change class at Garza High School, and students from the four high schools that were the focus of the research.

Methodology
This study employed data from the Texas Education Agency (TEA), the Texas Higher Education Board and the AISD Climate Surveys from both the 2005-2006 and 2006 - 2007 school years. In order to compare the 12 high schools in the Austin Independent School District, we wanted an objective measure that was already built into the data sets we were looking at.

We settled on the college readiness indicators such as scores of TAKS, SAT/ACT and AP/IB tests. Since public high schools profess to be about preparing students for college, we thought this measure would be most appropriate.

We quickly discovered that 6 AISD high schools fell below the state average and 6 were above it.

We quickly discovered that 6 AISD high schools fell below the state average and 6 were above. (See graph on the right) We then selected 4 high schools based on this ranking: Anderson, Austin, Akins and Reagan. Anderson ranked the highest while Reagan ranked relatively low and Akins ranked just below the state average. The selection of these schools using this methodology allowed us move away from the popular and tired East/West paradigm that was and is often employed by the media and others when discussing the public schools in Austin.

Overview of our Findings

Using the data from the Texas Higher Education Board we did a comparison of all four schools in the following areas: AP/IB Data, SAT/ACT data, High School Graduates, Graduates by Program, High school graduates in college and teachers by years of experience.

We found continuously that in each of the categories, Anderson and Austin ranked above the other schools. It should be noted that we also discovered that often all high schools including Akins and Reagan scored above state averages in the amount of students tested. But we also discovered something else. With respect to SAT/ACT Testing, Reagan tested 93.5% of their students while state average was only 65.8%. This is a great success along with the 3 other schools that also had many students testing.

What was unfortunate is that at Reagan High School only 2.3% of their students scored at or above criterion. While at Anderson and Austin over 50% of their students scored at or above the passing criterion.

The AISD Climate Surveys

In addition to analyzing College Readiness Indicators we also looked at the school environment. We contrasted the overall Academic Environment, Behavioral Environment, Adult/Student interactions, and the Physical Environment of each high school. We compiled our information using the Climate Survey results that AISD gathers from students every year because we felt students’ opinions are a primary resource in distinguishing a quality education.

For this section we sampled 3 questions from the Climate Surveys: “My teachers expect me to do my best work”, “My teachers challenge me to do better” and “I feel/felt well prepared for the TAKS test.” We compared the 4 schools side by side and charted the progress that schools have made.

Overall, the schools all made improvements from the 2005-2006 school year to the 2006-2007 school year. This section of our presentation was meant to serve as a window to see the “bigger picture.” In looking at the data we were able to see that Anderson and Austin fell at or above the AISD High School average. Akins responses varied from above the average to just below the average. Reagan was the only high school to experience a decrease in agreement to the questions we analyzed and it almost consistently fell below the high school averages.

The Future

Although our findings and presentation has been a great success we will continue to push further. We hope to take our project and expand it by delving deeper by including student voices and researching school programs and initiatives. We would like to emphasize that in order to attain equity, student voices and needs must be heard. Although we have highlighted these disparities we look to ignite positive change. Members of our community and students can work together to help schools adequately prepare students to succeed in higher education citizenship and the work force.

ABOUT: Austin Voices for Education and Youth

This private nonprofit organizations was founded by Amy Averett and a lot of friends who believed that it was important to have young people at the decision making table when it comes to schooling. After all, it is the young people who are the beneficiaries of this tremendous endeavor we call public education. The story on these pages is a great example of the that Austin Voices is doing in Austin, Texas.
Lena Guerrero, former State Representative and Texas Railroad Commissioner, passed away in her sleep on Thursday, April 24, 2008 under the loving care of her husband Lionel “Leo” Aguirre. Lena was a force of nature and the center of her two Leo’s lives and that of her very extended family and extensive network of friends and political colleagues. Lena was diagnosed with inoperable brain cancer over eight years ago and given only months to live. They didn’t know Lena!

Lena Guerrero was a champion. In her professional and political career, she was a champion for the disenfranchised, those who needed someone to help fight for their rights in Austin. She had a particular passion for mentoring young Hispanic women.

Within her family, she was a champion too. She dealt with the struggles in her personal life in the same way she dealt with those in her public life - with tenacity, vigor and a sense of humor that will be missed more than words can say.

Lena was born in 1957 and reared in Mission, Texas. She moved to Austin in 1976 to attend the University of Texas where she became active in politics and public affairs in the Democratic Party. She was elected president of Texas Young Democrats at the age of 21 in 1979.

In 1984, at the age of 25, she became only the second female Hispanic elected to the Texas Legislature. Her district included parts of central and east Austin. She quickly mastered the rules, procedures and politics of the House to become known as one of the state’s most effective lawmakers - often out good ‘ol boying the good ‘ol boys.

During her legislative career, she was known as a champion for the rights of migrant farm workers and the prevention of teen pregnancy. She also played a central role in passing legislation to preserve the views of the Texas Capitol.

In 1992, she became the first woman and first Hispanic to serve on the Railroad Commission of Texas when appointed by Governor Ann Richards. She lead the effort to help independent oil and gas producers increase production in Texas at a time when the industry was struggling, and she was a strong advocate for the use of alternative fuels.

Lena is the daughter of Adela Salazar Guerrero and the late Alvaro Guerrero. Her mother, her husband Lionel “Leo” Aguirre - whom she married in 1983 - and her son, Leo G. Aguirre, survive her.

The family encourages donations to Ballet Austin, 501 W. Third Street, Austin, Texas or the United Farm Workers of America, P.O. Box 62, Keene, California 93531.
Hispanic Austin Leadership
Class of 2008

HAL provides business leaders and professionals an opportunity to develop civic awareness, leadership skills and a network of colleagues for life. These are just some of the outcomes you can expect from Hispanic Austin Leadership (HAL). HAL provides participants an opportunity to become community leaders. Participants will be expected to continue to be engaged and to affect the proactive changes required to create equity, opportunity and a better quality of life for all of the Austin Area.

History:

Word Power

En Palabras

Hay Poder

No one can ever argue in the name of education, that it is better to know less than it is to know more. Being bilingual or trilingual or multilingual is about being educated in the 21st century. We look forward to bringing our readers various word lists in each issue of La Voz de Austin.

La gente The people esta are cansando tired
de los precios altos of the high prices que se esta viendo that they are seeing Algo tiene que pasar Something has to happen porque al paso que vamos because at the rate we are going va hacer insostenible sigue it is impossible to keep pagando más y más por paying more and more for las cosas de la vida the things in life Lo que no sabemos es What we don’t know is cuando se va enojarse when are people going to get mad
y yo digo enojarse de verdad and I mean really mad
Algo se tiene que hacer Something has got to be done
Si uno puede, registrese If one can, register para votar, escucha lo que to vote, listen to what estan diciendo they are saying
Se esta acabando el tiempo Time is running out

Los Años con Ocho

1798 The Naturalization Act raises the number of years - from 3 to 5 that an immigrant has to live in the United States before becoming eligible for citizenship.

1848 The Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo officially ended the U.S. - Mexico War. Under the treaty, half of the land area of Mexico - including Texas, California, most of Arizona and New Mexico, and parts of Colorado, Utah and Nevada - was ceded to the United States.

1898 After the USS Maine blew up in Havana Harbor, President William McKinley declared war against Spain. As an outcome, Cuba and Puerto Rico became independent of Spain but protectorates of the United States.

1918 Texas Rangers and Anglo ranchers executed 15 Mexican farmers in Porvenir, Texas, for allegedly participating in a raid on an Anglo ranch.

1928 The Confederación de Sociedades Mexicanas is formed at the urging of the Mexican government. It serves as an umbrella group for fledgling agricultural unions from by Mexican workers.

1938 The Mexican American Movement emerges in southern California mostly among college students committed to uplifting Mexican Americans through education and clean living.

1948 Mexican American veterans in Texas formed the American GI Forum to win the rights that they had fought for in wartime but lacked in peacetime. Led by its founder, Dr. Hector P. Garcia, and its national organizer, Molly Galvan, one of the first Chicanas to achieve political prominence, the GI Forum battled to desegregate South Texas schools and hospitals and ensure that juries were representative of the community.

1958 Chicano writer Americo Paredes releases his book With a Pistol in His Hand and set down an important pattern of narrative reconstruction with his story of Gregorio Cortez.

1968 Mexican soldiers open fire on protesting university students in Mexico City. Chicano students in East Los Angeles public high schools begin walkouts to protest the lack of a relevant curriculum, a shortage of teachers and other related issues.

1978 Mario Compean runs for Governor of Texas under La Raza Unida Party banner. This is the last year La Raza Unida Party appears on the ballot in Texas.

1988 Tony Garza, a lawyer in South Texas wins the Cameron County Judgeship and becomes the first Republican to hold the office.

2008 Rick Noriega from Houston wins the Democratic nomination for the United States and is running against John Cornyn in November.

Johnny “JD” Degollado is the premier conjunto accordionist, band-leader and songwriter for the Austin and surrounding areas and was born on November 24, 1935 in Travis County TX.

“JD” began playing the accordion in 1952 and at the early age of 15 years, started his own conjunto with neighbor, bajo-sexto player Vicente “Chente” Alonzo. JD and Chente have been playing together for the past 50 years.

In the 70’s many successful artists such as Ramon Ayala, Ruben Vela, Johnny Hernandez, Ruben Ramos, Alfonso Ramos, Los Aguileres, George y Maggie, Los Chamacos, Augustin Ramirez and the Home Town Boys began to play and record his original compositions. In 1973, Johnny won the award of “Song of the Year” at an event held in Austin by Carlos Velasquez. He is a member of the Tejano Music Hall of Fame and inducted into the Tejano Music Hall of Fame in 1986.

JD has written over 200 songs and is a member of BMI. He has recorded over 350 songs (polkas, redovas, cumbias, boleros, huapangos, waltzes, schottizes, rancheras, and corridos) plus many of his own compositions.
